

The Lord of the FISHES

Autobiography of a Spanish independent yogi

“Those were good times, happy Fridays, a time for fulfilment in which heaven seemed to be closer to all of us. When we were going home, at night, the streets were just glowing with the light of our consciousness. Nevertheless, the hustle and bustle of the city insisted on showing us the impermanence of the world. We thought, however, that we could witness ineffable things and perhaps that we could demonstrate with our example the timeless feature of every experience and the common essence in the names of all things. Clouded by ecstasy, by a big wave of understanding and discoveries, we were unaware of the long way ahead, a journey full of delights and of awaited insights, but also sown with not so enjoyable surprises. Completely unaware of the consequences of passing through a new door, in this case the door of that heaven in Pizarro Street, we took a deep breath knowing that we still would have a whole weekend ahead to enjoy those marvellous heights and the unrepeatable and perennial sound of Om.”

Fernando Sánchez Turrión (Bilbao, Spain, 1967) has a degree in physics (University of Salamanca, 1998), he is a yoga teacher (Sananda International Yoga Teachers Association, 2006) and a Bach Flower Remedies therapist (Aula Lluís Juan, 2005). He currently manages the Trans-formas Creative Spirituality Association. His two previous books have been published: Rugidos de almas, Roars of souls, (Mandala, Madrid, 2007) and Vibbuti: en lotos y cenizas, Vibbuti: in lotus and ashes, (Dédalo, Barcelona, 2009).

www.losdiscipulosdelsenorpez.com
www.facebook.com/losdiscipulosdelsenorpez